Chris Harrison, a street photographer from Brighton, UK is drawn to the quiet beauty and unexpected moments in everyday life – the kinds of scenes that often go unnoticed.

In 1987 he was mesmerised by an image in a magazine and shortly after, his mum bought him a second-hand 35mm camera, and he went to study graphic design and photography at art college. Chris made a few decent photos, but his young, impatient self took a while to realise candid photography was far harder. In 2016, after a 15-year hiatus from photography, and a chance visit to Arles Photo Festival, he rekindled his commitment.

His work has been featured in The Sunday Times Magazine, aired on ITV News, and used by Penguin Random House. Chris has won over 20 international awards, and his prints have been exhibited in London, Paris, Rome, Brussels, Gothenburg, San Francisco, LA, and Sydney. In 2024 he self-published his first book, Sideshow, which sold out and was bought by collectors in over 25 countries. He regularly lead workshops, judged competitions and spoke at photography festivals. Chris also has over 30 years' experience as a brand consultant and designer.
